The use of the subjunctive instead of those alternatives is very frequent in American English. In constructions of this type, any negation not (or never etc.) is normally placed before the subjunctive verb: One essential quality for a holiday novel is that it not be too light. I recommend that we not approve this letter.

(Don't use a hyphen with normal adverbs. They don't cause reading-flow stutters.) Read about hyphens in compound adjectives. (Issue 5) Make it clear what your adverb is modifying. Whenever you use an adverb (a single-word or multi-word one), do a quick check to ensure it's obvious what it refers to. Here are some examples of badly placed adverbs.
