Bards choose companions suited to their needs as poets, players and spies. As bards move freely from wilderness to metropolis, they often choose animal companions which are suited to life in either setting, and that do not raise the ire of the local constabulary. of course, this is not always the case. Many bards thrive on chaos, after all, and ...

When writing the book, Baum explicitly said that he wanted to make a story with all the wonder of a classic fairy tale but none of the horror and tragedy. By contrast, the movie features Toto getting sentenced to death, as well as Dorothy and her friends nearly getting killed by the Witch and her minions several times. Instead of the book's comical Witch, the movie's Witch is a genuinely scary ...
